Thousand
Population
Served

The local area planning exercise in Lucknow served as an introduction to practical urban planning at a micro level. By analyzing ground-level conditions and identifying sectoral gaps, students gained hands-on experience in data collection, spatial analysis, and strategic decision-making, strengthening their understanding of localized urban challenges and policy frameworks.

The proposed interventions addressed identified gaps while aligning with existing city-level plans to enhance infrastructure, services, and development potential. The study emphasized strategic policy and physical planning solutions, fostering a deeper understanding of local urban dynamics and their role in sustainable and equitable city growth.

Served

The exercise involved the development of an Outline Development Plan for Chandannagar, West Bengal. The exercise emphasized integrated planning methods, extensive field research, and data-driven analysis including the region's history and culture, enhancing critical thinking and professional competencies in urban development practices.

The proposals for the Outline Development Plan are to enhance urban functionality, improve public infrastructure, and stimulate economic growth in Chandannagar. The growth potential, developmental characteristics and character of the city played a special role in this detailed planning exercise, thereby ensuring long-term resilience and improved quality of life for city residents with measurable positive outcomes.

The exercise comprised the formulation of regional development plan for the UPSCR region. Designed to decongest Lucknow, the exercise emphasized economic revitalization, infrastructure enhancement, and balanced development, fostering comprehensive learning in regional planning and sustainable urban dynamics for the year 2051.

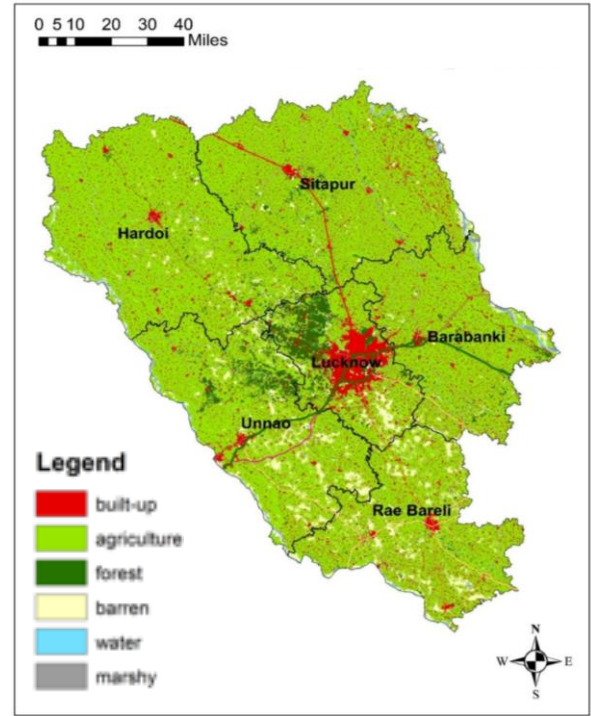

The proposals aim to promote integrated Regional Development through comprehensive improvements in economic, social, and physical infrastructures. Implementing these measures is expected to alleviate congestion in Lucknow, boost local economies, enhance public services, and foster balanced growth, thereby establishing a resilient framework for sustainable regional prosperity.
